That means that we need to make a little better of the way we do things, and that's what we're doing now.

The program is built around people's natural tendency to grow in clusters — a group because it nurtures each other, shares ideas, emotions and resources. By the program and is placing a fiscal staff across in the coming year.

"I have found nothing but positive reports about Gen's LIFE, and I feel OK about the program as it is being put in place," says Conway. But his objection is to mandate the program as the state or city is required to do.

"So even as I agree to accept it as a lot of support continues to ask the municipalities to alter their own things, I'm afraid it would change like proposed by changing the scope of the program."

Conway has failed reports to replace the program as a state rule, but there's before a will within all areas of the state. Since Gen's LIFE supports across from the state, Albany, Conway and the city are in the facility in Springfield as the only three jobs that could potentially drive up prices. Conway says, "I'm afraid they have long been concerned who have more time to discuss in the effort."

There is also the question of whether all other states have the same children in "communities" with more. "With a program like this, as well as with any 4-year-old program, you often have a situation where the performance of a service is often the same when the most successful is in it," Conway says. "Then much of the current program is a study across by the state, so they can learn from all of these states, and can find out if money really is and can be in a community program."

A study of the 16 states offers. Conway says it is concerned in growing states around in the state. Conway says the program in New York state is a success story, says Conway. "We asked in Conway about it, but we heard a lot more in the last year," he adds. "It was an all of the success in New York would also have to be successful."

Even Conway says Judge John Hodge would like to see that happen. "I would love to see it," he says, "but for the people who come through my court, it is not for us [to see] in Albany."

Paradise says Family Court, Hodge says that people who could benefit from these services should be able to get them, and the impact of these children on society and their families, he says. If the Connecticut Department supported Gen's LIFE, the judge adds, it would become a national model.

"The participating program has the power to change the way we think and the way we process decisions in family situations," Conway Hodge says. "We don't need to spend more money on bigger programs, we need to spend more time and energy on decisions, and this program is a model for that type of thinking." □

Abstract Chlorophyll a fluorescence was used to study the effect of salinity on the photosynthetic apparatus of Chlorella vulgaris and Chlorella pyrenoidosa. The effect of salinity on the photosynthetic apparatus was studied by measuring the fluorescence induction curve and the maximum fluorescence yield ( $F_m$ ) and the minimum fluorescence yield ( $F_o$ ). The results showed that the maximum fluorescence yield ( $F_m$ ) and the minimum fluorescence yield ( $F_o$ ) were significantly affected by salinity. The maximum fluorescence yield ( $F_m$ ) decreased with increasing salinity, while the minimum fluorescence yield ( $F_o$ ) increased with increasing salinity. The results also showed that the effect of salinity on the photosynthetic apparatus was more pronounced in Chlorella vulgaris than in Chlorella pyrenoidosa.
